

NOON EDITION

NOON EDITION

"A HARLEM TRAGEDY"—LOVE STORY BY O.
HENRY, IN TODAY'S DAY BOOK

THE DAY BOOK

An Adless Daily Newspaper.

N. D. Cochran,
Editor and Publisher.

398

500 South Peoria St.
Tel. Monroe 353.

VOL. 2, NO. 242

Chicago, Saturday, July 12, 1913

ONE CENT

LABOR ENTERS A FORMAL PROTEST AGAINST THAT HEARST EDITION

And Equal Suffrage Association Will Hear Protest of Chicago Federation of Labor and Women's Trade Union League Before Going Ahead With Deal.

Formal protest has been made by organized labor to the Illinois Equal Suffrage League against the deal with Hearst to publish a woman suffrage special edition of the Chicago Examiner on August 11, and Mrs. Grace Wilbur Trout, president of the league, will call a meeting of the executive board to determine whether to drop the matter or go ahead with the suffrage edition.

President John Fitzpatrick, of the Chicago Federation of Labor, and Alice Henry, editor of Life and Labor, both made strong protests in behalf of union labor.

The women said they didn't care anything about Hearst, but needed the money. President Fitzpatrick said labor would regard it as blood money, and organized labor had declared for woman's suffrage 25 years ago.

Alice Henry pointed out that the Suffrage League, by alliance with Hearst, would antagonize Progressives, Republicans, the better element of Democrats and the entire labor union movement; and that it wouldn't pay to make any such sacrifice for what money might be made out of an alliance with Hearst.

The story of the lockout of union pressmen by the Hearst newspapers on May 1, 1912, was told; how Hearst, when he came to Chicago in 1900 was, or pretended to be friendly to union labor, and was helped by Chicago unionists to get a big circulation for The American, and how afterward he joined the publishers' association and then took the lead in the newspaper war for the open shop